Story

Arielle and her cat, Bast, spend a pleasant afternoon in the forest.

Bast, being free from the usual four walls of their home, can't stay in one place. He runs around playing with everything that moves and most of things that don't too. In his haste to enjoy everything, he ends up getting away from Arielle.

He starts to hear her calling for him, but the forest is such an interesting place. There are so many things, so much space. Some little creatures challenge him. Bast pursues the little fellows. It feels great to run in the forest.

He is about to catch one of them. He jumps to grab it but he fails. He falls on top of some old stones. Something breaks under him. A cold breeze ruffles the trees chilling him to the bones. A smoke rises forming a shadow. The shadow gains form and then matter. Someone, something hovers above him. Some ancient foul-smelling thing that nails him to the ground. Bast is unable to move.

Nearby, Arielle calls for him. The thing, the Spirit, turns around. As Arielle comes closer, the Spirit flies in her direction and envelops her. Bast hears the muffled screams of Arielle. They grow fainter as the spirit disappears in the forest.

Bast is alone. The sounds of the night emphasize that feeling.

Arielle is gone, and it is his fault.

He realizes that the once pleasant forest became a strange and dark place.

He starts running, hoping to help her. He fears it is too late.

And so it starts...
